BECOME A LOCAL PROJECT COORDINATOR

Help local leaders grow and bring a Libre Foundation leadership and communication training to your region.

Why become an LPC?

As a Local Project Coordinator (LPC), you are the local contact person who connects Libre Foundation with leaders of Civil Society Organizations in your region.

You play an important role in making a Libre Foundation leadership training possible. You help identify and bring together a diverse group of leaders from small Civil Society Organizations and support the local organization of the training.

Create local impact Help leaders from small Civil Society Organizations access an intensive 5-day leadership training (40 hours in total).	Play a meaningful role Bring people together, help form the group and support the practical organization of the training.	Build connections Work with Libre Foundation and leaders from different organizations in your region.

What makes the training special?

Libre Foundation focuses on leadership training for leaders of small Civil Society Organizations in developing countries. Since 2008, Libre Foundation has organized more than 350 five-day trainings.

Follow-up 2-day refresher courses may be offered within two years after the training.

- 5 days of intensive leadership training
- No tuition fees for participants
- A highly interactive and practical approach
- Learning through role plays, discussion and feedback
- Focus on real-life leadership challenges
- Experienced trainers working on a voluntary basis

What is the role of an LPC?

As an LPC, you help Libre Foundation prepare and organize the training locally. Your role includes:

- Identifying potential participants through your local network.
- Bringing together a group of 15–17 leaders from local Civil Society Organizations.
- Identifying around 3 reserve candidates.
- Supporting communication with participants before the training.
- Helping identify and arrange a free venue for the training.
- Supporting the practical organization of the training locally.
- Staying in contact with Libre Foundation throughout the preparation process.

The LPC is not responsible for delivering the training. The training itself is facilitated by Libre Foundation trainers.

Who should you invite?

The training is intended for people with a leadership or decision-making role in an existing Civil Society Organization and at least one year of leadership experience. Examples include (co-)founders, board members, directors, CEOs, managing directors, general managers, program managers and members of an executive committee. A maximum of two participants per organization is allowed.

Participants must be able to attend the full five-day training, be advanced or fluent in the training language, and cover their own travel and accommodation costs. The primary target group is smaller CSOs with an annual budget below €100,000.

READY TO MAKE A DIFFERENCE?

Do you have a network of leaders from small Civil Society Organizations and would you like to help create opportunities for leadership development in your region?

Libre Foundation is looking for new partners to set up local trainings.

As a Local Project Coordinator, you can help bring leaders together, create connections between organizations and make leadership training accessible to people who can use these skills in their organizations and communities.

Get in touch and start the conversation.

daphne@librefoundation.nl
Daphne Meijer · International Project Coordinator Africa and Asia · Libre Foundation